Yosemite Area Transportation System

Thanks to the Yosemite Area Transportation System (YARTS), the constant drawbacks of overbearing traffic has been reduced during the summertime, making transit to and from and around Yosemite much easier and definitely much more pleasant. Yosemite has been offering this bus service for almost eight years now, providing a series of buses that not only service the park, but also local towns.

Using a bus as the best form of transit into and around Yosemite National Park has been clearly shown to make travelling and visiting the park more productive. No longer do visitors have to be subjected to gridlocks or finding a parking spot. Now they can hop on one of the many buses provided by YARTS (Yosemite Area Regional Transportation System) and enjoy both the attractions in the park and in nearby towns.

The system began serving Merced, Mariposa and Mono, as well as Yosemite National Park back in 2000. It operates year round with daily routes running between the towns and the park for a nominal fee, but valley trips are complementary. They can be picked up at most stores and hotels or on from the drivers.

Stops accommodate attractions, lodges, hotels, places of interest, tour companies and other destinations. The specially designed coaches can accommodate as many as 16 passengers, including some disabled and wheelchair people. They are comfortable, air conditioned and are a great way to have a tour of the local area without the higher costs associated with touring agencies. In fact, they have become a popular and more convenient way to get around the area, as well as the best form of transit it and around the park.
